

Bryanna Cure first started taking dance classes in Madison, Wisconsin, when she was four years old. Throughout primary and secondary school she studied ballet, jazz, tap, lyrical, and hula. In high school she also joined her school's pom squad, performing pom, funk, and kick routines. Bryanna's passion followed her into college where she continued to study dance, adding contemporary, ballroom styles, and musical theater classes to her repertoire. She also joined a collegiate dance team that she was a part of for three years (She later coached this team for an additional two years.). With her collegiate team she successfully choreographed for and participated in dance competitions throughout the Midwest, in group numbers, solos, and duets. Bryanna danced for the Wisconsin Wolfpack, a professional indoor football team, as well as, the Madison Mustangs and the Dane County Hawks semi professional football teams.

Bryanna is a member of Wingspan Dance Madison, a contemporary modern dance company, since 2018. She believes in lifelong learning and continues to attend conventions and workshops, take classes, and immerse herself in dance culture and diversity.

Bryanna has been teaching dance for a decade, in a variety of styles, and working with a spectrum of students, from beginning level young children to advanced level teens and adults. She has choreographed and coached multiple teams and students to award winning performances at regional and national competitions. She is dedicated to cultivating passion for dance in a fun and positive atmosphere and inspiring students to express themselves through movement.
